

St. Jerome Night Live Mad Libs

Bible Stories Told Like Never Before

Saint Jerome was one of the most brilliant students of language in the Church's history. He single handedly translated the entire Bible from Hebrew and Greek into Latin in a translation we call the Vulgate.

Translation is hard work and I'm sure that Saint Jerome had to pay close attention to each word to get it right. With all those stories so close in his mind every day and figuring out all those words, I wonder if he dreamed in Mad Libs? Come to this truly unique night to see our Biblical Mad Libs (which you will help generate) to be acted out on stage!

The Wired Little Cow

There once was a baby cow that wandered into the Calf-ateria and drank some red Bulls and was totally wired on Calf-ine. This cow was so excited that it was bouncing off the walls for an hour before she jumped over the moon. The poor little cow didn't have wings as red bull promised so she landed hard and broke her legs. Now all her friends call her ground beef. Now all she can do is hang around and look at the grass and she has turned into a real meat loaf. Then one day a crazy veterinarian came around and said that with the right dose of electricity he could make her walk again. So she said yes, but the Vet gave her the wrong dose and she caught fire. Now her friends call her Roast Beef. The farmer went up to the vet and said, "Well done," so the Vet waited a little longer before putting her out. Then the cow died and her soul rose up to the Milky Way where God took her to heaven. (No actual animals were hurt in the writing of this story, the character portrayed in this story is as resilient as Tom & Jerry in the cartoons and at no point felt pain while securing your amusement. Save the polar bears!)
